"I was this grotesque, unrecognizable version of myself."

As a former communications director and researcher who authored reports for the World Health Organization, Patricia Leidl understood global health policy firsthand. But when an extreme series of health issues derailed her life and career, she found herself facing widespread medical gaslighting and isolation.

Watch Patricia Leidl's full, unedited testimony before the Allison Inquiry (Day Three, 10 September 2026) as she recounts her symptoms, her journey to seek care, and why she chose to speak out despite the personal and professional costs.
